Disability rights

Many people will have a disability at some stage in their lives. For some, the disability will be temporary. Others may be affected for a lifetime.

Whatever the type or impact of a disability, everyone has the right to be an active member of their community and to have a say in the decisions that affect their lives.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, which Australia ratified in 2008, sets out the role of governments to make this a reality.

However, negative attitudes, physical barriers and difficulties accessing necessary supports still limit the opportunities of people with disabilities to find work, study, socialise and be included in community life.

In Australia, the Disability Discrimination Act protects people across Australia from unfair treatment in many areas of public life. It also promotes equal rights, equal opportunity and equal access for people with disabilities.

About

- Around 6.8 million Australians (40 per cent) aged 18 years and over report having a disability or long-term health condition.¹ Most (87 per cent) are restricted in carrying out at least one everyday activity, such as self-care, mobility or communication.²
- The likelihood of having a disability increases as people age. For example, seven per cent of children aged under 15 years, 15 per cent of people aged 15 to 64 years and over half (53 per cent) of people aged 65 years and over report having some form of disability.³
- In 2009, 290,000 children aged 0 to 14 years reported having a disability. Over half (57 per cent) had a profound or severe disability and almost one in five (18 per cent) had a moderate or mild disability.⁴

Key issues for people with disabilities

- People with disabilities are more likely to experience poverty, live in poor quality or insecure housing and have low levels of education. They are often socially isolated, with fewer opportunities to take part in community life.⁵
- Mental health problems and mental illness are among the greatest causes of disability, diminished quality of life and reduced productivity.⁶
- Australia ranks lowest among OECD countries for the relative income of people with disabilities.⁷ Overall employment rates for people with disabilities remain low, with workforce participation at around 54 per cent compared to 83 per cent for people without a disability.⁸
- In NSW, young people with mental health disorders and/or cognitive impairment are at least six times more likely to be in prison compared with young people without a disability.⁹
- Despite progress towards making all public transport in Australia fully accessible by 2022, 1.2 million people with disabilities report difficulties using public transport.¹⁰
- More than a quarter of people who report sexual assault have a disability.¹¹ Ninety per cent of women with intellectual disabilities have been sexually abused.¹²

Positive developments

- In 2009, children with disabilities had significantly higher rates of participation in school compared to children without disability (82 per cent and 77 per cent respectively). This reflects a growing number of children with disabilities staying in school for longer.¹³
- Most people with disabilities (94 per cent) have the support they need to live in private residences; 74 per cent live with others and 20 per cent live alone. People with disabilities are also more likely to own their own home outright (24 per cent) compared with people who do not have disabilities (16 per cent).¹⁴
- In July 2013, the National Disability Insurance Scheme was rolled out in Tasmania, South Australia, Victoria (Barwon area) and NSW (Hunter area). From July 2014, it will commence across the ACT and in the Northern Territory (Barkly region) and Western Australia (Perth Hills area). The full national scheme will commence progressively from July 2016.

Did you know?

The life expectancy of Australians born with Down Syndrome has more than tripled in the four decades to 2002, increasing from 18 years to 60 years. A contributing factor to this positive outcome is the shift in public attitudes regarding Down Syndrome.¹⁵

Our role

The Commission helps people resolve complaints of unfair treatment under the Disability Discrimination Act. We also assess applications for temporary exemptions under the Act and provide advice on laws, policies and programs that affect people with disabilities.

The Disability Discrimination Commissioner works in partnership with others to help all Australians understand their rights and meet their legal responsibilities by conducting public inquiries, negotiating disability standards and guidelines and assisting organisations to develop Disability Action Plans.
